We cordially welcome you to the Bergstrasse, the Riviera of Germany, a special spot.

The spring sun begins to warm the earth here while people in other regions are still shivering. Here, almond and fruit trees bloom while frost still numbs the earth in other places. Summer is longer here, and autumn more pleasant. The Bergstrasse is a treat, a place to let go and relax.

The Bergstrasse is more than a landscape; it is a feeling, a way of life. Castles, palaces and well-preserved city centres link the art nouveau centre Darmstadt and world-famous Heidelberg, making history come to life.

The Mediterranean climate warms the grapes that go into our exquisite wines, and exotic plants thrive as well. Parks, gardens and woods surround the visitor, as in a fairy tale. The Schlosspark (Palace Park) in Weinheim contains the tallest cedar that is rooted in German soil, while the Fürs-

Sights to see

From the Jagdschloss Kranichstein (Kranichstein Hunting Lodge) in Darmstadt to the world-famous palace on the hill above the university city of Heidelberg; along the Bergstrasse, castles, palaces and monasteries are strung together like the pearls on a necklace. They carry with them memories of an age of knights, princes and kings. More than 30 of these imposing memorials emerge from woods and vineyards – stone jewels that are just as much a part of the landscape as green meadows, lush woods and grapevines. The silhouettes could have been taken from a historical film.

The Romans settled the Bergstrasse, and fell in love with the “strata montana”, or “mountain street”. The monastery in Lorsch shaped the politics in the region for centuries. The Carolingian Königshalle (King’s Hall) in Lorsch, which has been a UNESCO world cultural site since 1991, is the oldest building from this era in Germany. Palaces and duke’s residences bear witness to the splendour and wealth of the Middle Ages, while stubborn ruins remind us of bitter battles and feuds. The Mathildenhöhe in Darmstadt is recognized as the centre of art nouveau, the Heidelberg Palace, high above the river, as the symbol of the Romantic era. Proud half-timbered city halls stand guard over cobblestoned market squares, in the middle of which exquisite sandstone fountains bubble. In lovingly restored ancient districts such as the Gerberbach district in Weinheim, cosy little cottages whisper of the Middle Ages. Everywhere, experienced guides offer city tours on interesting topics: the haunting Laternenweg, or Lantern Way, threads its way through Heppenheim. And yet the ancient villages and cities are also full of new life. Modern retail shops offer their goods and services where once peddlers and market wives clamoured. Take a slow stroll through shops and history.

Experience it

The Bergstrasse represents an ideal wedding between culture and nature. Concerts, exhibits, and whole pageants lure visitors to historical locations – a unique cultural flavour. The theatres in Darmstadt and Heidelberg have international reputations; comics, artists and musicians peek out from between the castles and half-timbered houses, displaying their arts. Small arts theatres have sprung up in restaurants and bars along the Bergstrasse; the parks, gardens and monuments of the region, such as the Schlosspark in Weinheim, Heppenheim’s Kurmainzer Amtshof or the Heiligenberg Palace in Seeheim-Jugenheim are transformed into stages for world-famous stars who are fascinated by the region.

In addition, the Bergstrasse offers festivals – wine festivals, historical church anniversaries, locally known as Kerwe, and lively annual markets, beginning with the large Mathaise Market in Schriesheim. The inhabitants of the Bergstrasse celebrate every season of the year. Of course autumn is their favourite, that season that is flecked with the colour of the vineyard landscape. But even more than this, they like to invite guests to come. The Bergsträßer Weinherbst (Bergstrasse wine autumn) is a collection of all events dealing with fine wines. And when the blossoms are out, the season’s attraction is the Bergsträßer Weinfrühling, or Bergstrasse wine spring, with a vineyard hike and culinary highlights.

People of the Bergstrasse like to eat well, and the culinary offerings here are full of fresh ingredients straight from the woods, like mushrooms and herbs. Hunters bring deer and wild boar to the restaurateurs’ tables; here, only homemade food counts. In farmhouses and wine pubs, in fine hotels and starred restaurants, the chefs are proud of the specialties of their region. The Bergstrasse can be tasted.

Active

These days, the knights of the Bergstrasse sit in comfortable slender saddles and choose between 18 gears. More and more, the Bergstrasse is becoming an oasis for athletic and active holiday-makers, a large open-air fitness centre between the mountains and the vineyards. More than 85 kilometres of bike paths form an extensive network between the cities and sights. The routes vary from leisurely to strenuous – just as you like. The Burgenweg, or castle route, takes in all the castles and palaces between Darmstadt and Heidelberg; in three or four days, hikers can visit the landscape and history of the Bergstrasse in this way. And the best thing is: whether you are in the bike saddle or on your own two feet, the path always leads to or past hospitable villages. Short trail breaks can become chances to celebrate. No one is in a hurry at the Bergstrasse, but everyone knows how to enjoy life. And there are buses and railways to most destinations.

There is a huge variety of exercise and sport activities. In summer, visitors are drawn to attractive lakes and swimming pools, or to ice rinks and sledding hills in winter. Joggers and mountain bikers challenge themselves on the slopes leading up to the near Odenwald, or enjoy the shade of the woods in the UNESCO Geopark there. Golf courses lend themselves well to the natural landscape. In Weinheim, the first geothermic baths in southern Germany, “Miramar”, entices visitors with salt-containing spring water bubbling up from 1000 metres below the earth’s surface.

The wine country of the Bergstrasse

The sun shines here 1600 hours in a year, its rays laughing along with the people, because both of them know that this warm radiance helps great wines to ripen. The wines of the Bergstrasse are high-class – striking like Rieslings from famous locations such as the Fürstenlager in Auerbach, Streichling in Bensheim or Centgericht in Heppenheim; aromatic and full of character, like the pinot gris or pinot blanc from Sonnberg in Laudenschheim or Kuhberg in Schriesheim. Elegant pinot noirs grew on the Bergstrasse in an era when wine drinkers still turned up their noses at German red wines – today, connoisseurs are happy to sniff the bouquet of ripe cherries and woods berries. About 840 hectares of vineyards connect the Bergstrasse wine region of Hessen with the Bergstrasse region in the neighbouring state of Baden-Württemberg. Small choice family-run businesses grow grapes according to ancient traditions, cultivate their vineyards and, in old vault-ceilinged cellars, produce their specialties, like Trockenbeerenauslese and even ice wine. Well-known winemakers’ associations and co-operatives present their entire repertoires of good-tasting wines.

“Wein und Stein”, or “wines and stones”, is the name of the UNESCO Geopark’s experiential and educational path, which winds its way through the vines. Everywhere you go, there are educational paths and guided hikes. All vineyards and wine-growing estates are happy to offer samples and tastings; experienced winegrowers give expert advice, as do charming wine queens. The Bergstrasse is the answer to the question of good taste.
